Public Charge

Public Charge is a federal immigration statute under United States law in which certain nonimmigrants are barred from entering the United States or remaining in the United States for a certain amount of time. To determine if someone is subject to Public Charge, the following factors are considered:

- Income level
- Public assistance programs
- Medical care
- Education
- Child care
- Housing
- Social services
- Employment

If a nonimmigrant is found to be financially dependent on the US government for more than 25% of their income, they may be considered for exclusion fromentrée or removal from the United States.

In addition, Public Charge may affect eligibility for certain benefits, such as Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid.

It is important to note that the determination of Public Charge is made on a case-by-case basis and is subject to change. Nonimmigrants should consult with an immigration lawyer to determine their eligibility for Public Charge.
